SPECIAL PROJECTS COORDINATOR

Are you passionate about local news and current events? Do you thrive on variety, live for a deadline, and know your way around both people and pages? We're looking for someone who's curious, adaptable, and committed to good storytelling and community service. We're always working on special sections, niche publications, and creative side projects that fall outside the usual news cycle. Each one needs someone who can chase down stories, design pages, and work with advertisers. If you can do two of the following—reporting, layout, or sales—we'd like to hear from you. If you can do all three? Let's talk today.

We're looking for someone who:

- Cares deeply about community journalism
- Is comfortable striking up a conversation with anyone
- Can take ownership of a project from brainstorm to press
- Wants to be part of a tight-knit team where individual effort matters

Whether you're a reporter with an eye for content design, a designer who likes a good interview, or a people-person who also happens to write, we want to hear your story.

Full-time. Benefits. Small-town charm included.

Send a resume, writing samples, or just a thoughtful note to editor@McCookGazette.com. Let us know how you'd help us get the job done—and why you think local news still matters.
